Most travel apps remember the date you searched for. Trip does not. So, if you put in a date and then flip to other screens to do some research (on more reliable services) the app will flip your dates back to its default. So, if you want "May" it may flip your dates to "Mar". Then, when you try to get a change to the right dates all they say is "Our apologies, we'll give you a couple of bucks, but other than that, you're out a boatload of money for that hotel room you won't be able to use."

App looks cheap and scammy, and most of the so-called 'deals' are also scams- pressure you to put your details in as quickly as possible and then tell you the promotion is unavailable to get you to buy something that you don't want for more money. Has an annoying virtual assistant thing that floats around the screen, and it's next to impossible to actually find anything useful on the app interface - as above, it seems to be designed as a medium for ads and dubious deals rather than usefulness.

I'm extremely disappointed with the current beta version of this app. It's now full and restricted for entering, which means I can't access my account or check my bookings. This is extremely inconvenient, especially when traveling, as I'm unable to show my bookings to others or contact customer support if something goes wrong. An app meant to make things easier has done the opposite! Please fix this issue and provide better access or alternative solutions for users.
